The Reform Bill. (From the "Times.")	1.0
The speech of the Chancellor of the Excheque last night, in explaining the details of the Re- form Bill, agreed upon so far by the Administra	e tion, has added nothing to our knowledge, by	t antiefactory character. Whatever hopes man have been entertained of obtaining a thoroughly	7
Ministry, we fear they must be discarded. No men have, in our memory, been treated with	0 such indulgence; no men have proved themselve so incapable of rising to the exigencies of their	8 great position. Mr. Disraeli himself sceme	d same despondency as he had shown on previous Black Mondays; though it might have been ex pected that now, if ever, the obstacles to his free	-
His genius deserted him. A "lack-lustre" style	0 too precisely corresponded to a scheme marke with a fatal perversity of error. Mr. Gladstone's criticism on the cardinal points of the Minis	ì terial plan, powerful as it was, was scarcely needed to expose its mistakes, and even Mr	7
Gladstone's opposition was not so damaging as the dissatisfaction [expressed by some among the most eminent and respected supporters of	3

of it as "unmitigated mischief," the presump-	1
If, however, we could separate the proposed re- duction of the occupying frauchise in boroughs from the compensations with which it is clogged,	1 we should think better of the Ministerial scheme. Mr. Roebuck, indeed, expressed his belief that the plan of dual voting was an ex- crescence in no respect vital to the Bill; but until some competent member of the Ministry admits this to be the case, we are compelled to regard it as an essential part of the measure.	1
It is almost inconceivable that the Government should once more have ventured on proposals	1 to which they do not mean to adhere, and Mr. Disraoli's language at the close of the discussion implied that "dual" voting was an indispensable	1
the franchise in boroughs on a household oc-	1 theoretically it is not an ultimate stage of re- duction, but we are satisfied that practically it might be made the basis of a permanent give a hostage to fortune, however simple,— and it must be remembered that the impor- tance of the pludge must always be measured such reference to his means,—and we are such sided that he may be safely admitted to a	- chare in the Government of the nation. It is on this ground that Mr. Honley recommends a Household Suffrage, and we agree with him that	1 pound houselders " is by no means insuperable	1 if it be fairly faced by both sides of the House. Personal responsibility is the idea of Mr. Gladstone as much as of Mr. Disraeli, of Mr. Henley	ı able hostility to a proposal which Wy Banker	1 dual vote, Mr. Gladstone said, struck at the British Constitution. We should prefer to say that he struck a fatul blow at our internal prace, that he proposed to introduce a disintegrating clearent into the community which would set be class against class, engender the most bitter	8 jealousy and animosities, and would leave evil effects long after it had been itself eliminated from our political system. It is the fatal, the Exchequer to Lord Cranborne would lead to the conclusion that, whatever the the Minls- try might be disposed to surrender, this would regret an act of political suicide. Other arrors	( there are in the Government scheme, but this is fatal. The omission of the Lodger Franchise would exclude the artisans in large towns from	C any share of the suffrage, and is inconsistent not only with Mr. Disrael's own argument in 1259, but with any pretension to a complete re- presentation of classes. The selection of a	子下

the Government did not lis on a more liberal limit. But these are errors which, if not venial, are remediable; they discredit the sagacity of the Ministry, but they might have been corrected. The suggestion of dual voting is a more serious	1 mistake; it reveals an entire misconception of the spirit which prompts the demand for Re- form, a distrust of the classes to be enfranchised	la which shows that their proposed enfranchise- ment is nothing but a delusion, an incapacity to read the lessons of the hour which makes it a question whether it be not trifling with the a question whether it be not triffing with the nation to endure any longer a scheme of procedure which so plainly threatens to end in settling the question of Parliamentary Reform this session, but we are constrained to warn the Government that this hope and their own existence depend upon their readiness to modify the Bill the Chancellor of the Exchequer last night unfolded to the House of Commons. As it was explained by him it cannot be accepted. With a great show of liberality it is not liberal; making a profession of adopting a resting-place which shall be Conservative, it introduces a provision which would make the electoral system of the country thoroughly unstable; meddling with the redistribution of seats, it would unsettle all things and settle none. All sections of the House concur in condemning, if not the whole scheme, parts which are declared to be L. ton, Rice, Coals, and other Merchandisc essential to it; nor do we see any hope of escape in their own Bosts, and to receive the same on Storage in first class GRANITE GODOWNS a resolute endeavour on the part of the Ministry to retrace, their steps, and, happily, their previous ROBT. S. WALKER & Co. ous conduct gives us no reason to despair that they will make any amount of concession to the elearly-expressed opinion of the House. M. DE PERSIONY ON GREAT MEN. - Great men, great Ministers have been, above all, men of character. Firmness, grandeur of soul, generosity, prudence, moderation, justice-all play the first part in the government of nations; whereas in Assemblies, on the contrary, are they not the qualities of mind, the art of speak ing well, of producing effect, the ability to excite, to flatter self-esteem, to group ambitions: THE HOUSE, recently occupied by Dr. that, hold the first place? The conduct of MURRAY, corner of Flain Street, containing Covernments and the management of Assem 5 Rooms, Study, Store Room, Pantry, Bathrooms blies require qualities so diverse that it is 3 Stall Stable, Coach House, &c. Water laid on difficult to find men competent for both func-tions. Experience has shown that aptitude for THOS. W. BARRINGTON. the one does not imply aptitude for the other. Human superiority consists in a certain harmony, a certain equilibrium between the most precious gifts of the heart and mind. Genius THE whole or part of a HOUSE, situated in Policies on any First-class Sailing Vessels or an intellectual sense, by those whom Nature, in the unequal distribution of its favours, has made all heart or all mind. It will bow before the subline charity of St. Vincent de Paul, but it will be vanquished in a Parliament by those prodigies of eloquenez who make the charm of Assembles and the peril of States.
